moCa Cleveland Receives $100,000 Warhol Foundation Grant, Announces Fall 2026 Exhibition Season

Featuring the first museum retrospective of artist Jody Pinto, a career-spanning exhibition of Tishan Hsu, and revelatory presentations by Rachel Rose and Faye Wei Wei.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

■CLEVELAND, OHIO (July 9, 2026)—moCa Cleveland has received a $100,000 grant from The Andy Warhol Foundation for the Visual Arts to support artist commissions and exhibitions over the next two years. The award strengthens the museum's mission to support the ambitious visions of exceptional contemporary artists and to connect Northeast Ohio audiences with boundary-pushing art and ideas from around the world.

Under the curatorial vision of Deputy Director & Senior Curator DJ Hellerman, the museum continues to be a risk-taking commissioning agent, working with artists whose practices expand contemporary discourse and introduce new models of expression and exchange.

"moCa is championing artists whose work is critically valuable yet often underrecognized," said moCa Cleveland Kohl Executive Director Megan Lykins Reich. "Most of the artists supported by this award have never exhibited work in our region, and several will have their first museum exhibition with moCa. These projects offer new, incisive perspectives on our world, inviting audiences to engage with urgent questions and expansive possibilities."

Opening Friday, August 28, 2026, moCa's next season is anchored by Jody Pinto: Body/Land, the first retrospective and first solo museum exhibition dedicated to the groundbreaking and underrecognized artist whose work bridges Land art, feminist activism, public sculpture, and environmental design. Body/Land spans new and historic works at the exhibition at moCa's Cleveland as well as a newly commissioned outdoor sculpture presented in partnership with Art Lot in Brooklyn, New York.

"The exhibition is a conversation, a collaboration, an experiment recognizing the Body/Land again and again." —Jody Pinto

Additional exhibitions feature pioneering artist Tishan Hsu, whose work anticipated today's conversations around technology and the body, internationally acclaimed filmmaker Rachel Rose, and emerging painter Faye Wei Wei.

■ Jody Pinto: Body/Land 2026 Toby's Prize Recipient Opening: August 28, 2026

Jody Pinto: Body/Land is the first retrospective and first solo museum exhibition devoted to the artist's groundbreaking five-decade practice. Co-curated by Hellerman and independent curator Marie Catalano, the exhibition surveys Pinto's work from her leadership in rape crisis activism and early outdoor sculptures to major public art commissions, landscape interventions, and urban design projects.

"Since the late 1960s, Jody has developed a distinctive visual language to explore her enduring interest in people and places. The majority of her work was created without centering the expectations of the gallery, the market, or the museum. Long before questions of embodiment, ecology, power, and our relationship to place became defining concerns of our time, Jody had already been engaging the complexity of these issues with incisive clarity, depth, and wonder. Only now (finally) is a broader audience developing the sensibility to fully recognize and engage the significance of Jody's work." —DJ Hellerman, Deputy Director & Sr. Curator

The exhibition will restage several significant installations and bring together drawings, unrealized proposals, archival materials, and a newly commissioned outdoor sculpture presented in partnership with Art Lot in Brooklyn, New York. A major publication, the artist's first monograph, will accompany the exhibition.

Emerging within the Land art movement of the 1970s, Pinto developed what she described as "living structures," site-responsive works shaped by weather, participation, and natural processes. As founder of Women Organized Against Rape (WOAR) in 1973, she links feminist activism with a lifelong commitment to public space. Her concept of "body/land" connects bodily and environmental systems, revealing parallels between cycles of injury and healing. Since the 1990s, Pinto has completed more than 50 public commissions internationally, exploring civic space as a site for transformative encounters.

"For decades, Jody Pinto has pursued a sustained exploration of the relationships between bodies and landscapes, and structures that inflict harm or make healing possible. By bringing together her work across Land art, activism, education and civic design for the first time, this exhibition reveals the continuity of that inquiry across her singular practice." —Marie Catalano, Independent Curator Body/land is a Toby's Prize presentation, a biennial award by philanthropist and longtime moCa trustee Toby Devan Lewis that supports new commissions by underrecognized artists. The award includes an unrestricted artist honorarium, funding for new work, a solo exhibition, and an accompanying publication. Previous recipients include Sondra Perry (2018); Jade Guanaro Kuriki-Olivo (Puppies Puppies) (2022); and Ruben Ulises Rodriguez Montoya (2024).

Lead support for Jody Pinto: Body/Land is provided by Margaret Cohen & Kevin Rahilly and the John P. Murphy Foundation.

■Tishan Hsu: permeable surface

For more than four decades, Tishan Hsu has explored the evolving relationship between the human body and technology. A prescient voice in contemporary art, Hsu began examining the psychological and physical effects of digital systems long before the rise of smartphones, social media, and artificial intelligence.

permeable surface presents a career-spanning selection of works that trace Hsu's ongoing investigation into perception, embodiment, and technological mediation. Bringing together sculpture, painting, and video—including his first and most recent moving-image works, Folds of Oil (2005) and emergent mesh (2025)—the exhibition reveals how Hsu anticipated many of the questions that define contemporary life today. Through biomorphic forms, industrial materials, and digitally inflected imagery, Hsu's work offers a compelling vision of humanity's increasing entanglement with technological systems.

◀Rachel Rose, Lake Valley, 2016 (still). Single-channel HD video with unique installation. 8 minutes, 25 seconds. Courtesy of Art Bridges.

■Rachel Rose: Lake Valley

Lake Valley is an eight-minute animated film by Rachel Rose that explores loneliness, imagination, and the search for connection. Drawing on imagery sourced from nineteenth- and twentieth-century children's books, Rose combines collage, found materials, and experimental sound to create a dreamlike narrative.

The film follows a solitary rabbit-like creature that leaves its suburban home in search of friendship in a nearby forest. Through its distinctive visual language and unexpected soundscape, Lake Valley transforms familiar storybook imagery into a poignant meditation on belonging, adventure, and the universal desire for companionship.

Support for Rachel Rose: Lake Valley is provided by Art Bridges.

Characterized by expressive brushwork, unexpected color relationships, and fluid compositions, Wei Wei's paintings evoke themes of love, longing, transformation, and emotional vulnerability. Her distinctive visual language has earned growing international attention and established her as an important new voice in contemporary painting.
